EdLeads is a 30-credit hour program designed to meet the needs of in-service teachers and school administrators who wish to enroll in a program of graduate studies leading to the M.Ed. degree in Educational Foundations. The program can be pursued without career interruption through a combination of online work and on-campus classes concentrated over two consecutive summer terms that last five weeks each. The entire program may be completed in less than fifteen months (May 26, 2009 to August 13, 2010). EdLeads emphasizes issues of cultural and multicultural awareness and diversity in a comparative and international context. It also embraces the idea of professional leadership for teachers and other educators.

The program features an excellent resident faculty and visiting professors from other institutions. Students learn from each other in a community that invites intellectual stimulation and social interaction. Planned events include Kula Ho'olaule'a—festive gatherings that combine intellectual and social fellowship. The program was launched in 1998 and has enrolled approximately twenty-five students in each of five cohorts.

In 1999 the Educational Leadership in the Asia/Pacific Region Master's in Education Degree Program received the Exemplary Program Award from the North American Association of Summer Sessions. The program was selected for receipt of this prestigious award from among 400 universities and colleges throughout North America.
